was buried at Lucca to-day. Her faithful maid and a few English and American residents were her only mourners.

The end of this talented woman came in her little hovel in this most uninter esting town. She was penniless and had not even simple comforts. Yet she had a fire and a roof and a stone floor, a bed, some chairs, and blankets.

Wrapped in the blankets, she sat be fore the fire and maintained her proud spirit, vehemently declaring her independence of the world, until she spoke no more. An English physician called on her shortly before she died.

Hypothetical Question Put.

The reading of the hypothetical question was resumed after recess. Littleton made a fast job of it. He rattled off the question with few pauses. It took him about an hour and a half to dispose of some 15,000 words.

The question embodied the testimony from Mrs. William Thaw and other members of the Thaw family of insanity in the Thaw family; the testimony of the foreign doctors and nurses at the morning session, describing Thaw's manner as wild, staring, and maniacal depression; the trip to Paris by Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit, and of his offer to marry her, explanation that she could not marry Owing to examinations, there will be him because of her relations with White.
